

Why African Black Rhinos are in Danger of Extinction

African black rhinos are roaming Africa but they are in danger of extinction. Did you know the rhino itself can charge/run 30 miles an hour and still at least one rhino is killed every day.

Mostly rhinos are nearly extinct because some countries believe that rhino horns heal diseases even though there is no proof.

It was this lack of food which led to the danger of their extinction.

There was no grass which is vital for their health, the drop in temperature means they are moving inland for warmer habitats. Humans are also destroying shelters for the rhinos.

So that is why the only places you can see rhinos today is in theme parks/zoos and videos.
