

Why Pangolins are Extinct

Pangolins live in Asia, their bed is made out of leaves and sticks to keep them warm and their homes are in trees. They're really really shy and sometimes their scales can be used for accessories. So what caused their extinction?

The Main reason is they were hunted for their tasty meat and for fashion. They are also used for traditional medicine to help children. They can be captured easily because they are shy so they wouldn't hurt a human but just in case they corner themselves.

That's why the only pangolins you see today are in pictures, books and video games.
